The rate heretofore has afforded no profit, and the daily expectation of having to order currency to meet the demand for money has implied them to make the change. Rates to-day were unsettled, and some bills were taken at par; but no farther contracts will be filled on that basis, and all bills taken to-morrow will have to submit to the ¼ discount. In checking there is no change, and the demand is light. A round amount might be had on New York at a small rebate from ¼ premium, but in ordinary sums the rate is firm as quoted. Currency is becoming scarce, and paper is not easily placed except it be on very short time and highly gilt. The demand active from merchants for this early steps in the season and the indications point to a close market during the summer.
